

Research Peer Review By Liam Wise. For Stew Lincoln.

1. Is there a clear thesis statement? What is it?

The paper contains a distinct thesis statement. The paper argues that professional athletes and college athletes should avoid sports betting

2. Is the introduction interesting? If not, what can you suggest to improve it?

The introduction section presents interesting content which effectively explains the main subject. The writer should begin with a brief sports gambling-related story or unexpected fact to create a stronger impact on readers.

3. Are there at least 6 in-text citations?

Yes, there are at least six in-text citations throughout the paper. The writer uses several different sources to back up their points.

4. Are the citations formatted correctly?

The citations follow the correct format but several entries show minor errors. The writer needs to verify all citation elements

5. Is the Works Cited page formatted correctly?

The by fixing hanging indents and line spacing and ensuring all entries follow a uniform style.

6. Is the essay between 2300-2800 words in length, NOT counting the Works Cited page? If not, what would you suggest the writer do to meet the requirement?

Yes, The the essay appears suitable so the authors should avoid making any additional changes to the content.

7. Does the paper make sense? Is the argument logically structured?

The paper maintains its overall coherence while presenting a straightforward argument. The paper needs better paragraph organization through transition improvement

8. Does the author use first or second person point of view? If so, point it out to them.

The paper contains minimal first and second person elements. The third person perspective in this research paper functions effectively for

9. Does the author use contractions anywhere? If so, point it out to them.

They should change these to “do not,” “it is,” “you are,” and “are not.”

10. Give the author at least 3 suggestions on how they can improve their paper.

First, break up some of teh really long paragraphs

Second add a short counterargument in the section and respond to it

Go back carefully and look through the grammer.